Le Parvis is a small cliff with fairly quick access. The nature of the rock is quite similar to its neighbour Vergisson. The quality of the rock is variable, with different profiles and relatively varied climbing styles (slabs, dihedrals, cracks, etc.). The pitches are often fairly short (generally around twenty metres).

Vergisson is THE cliff for climbers in the Mâconnais. This ochre and white limestone bar rises vertically above the vineyards. The rock isn't fabulous everywhere, but there are some very nice, compact, sculpted areas. The rock is steep and high (up to 30m). The climbing is rarely continuous, but is quite varied: walls, dihedrals, overhangs, roofs and even a well.

I work raw clay at the potter's wheel, with slab or by modeling. The pieces produced are then baked twice in a potter's gas oven. Although it is always preferable to control each step of production of a ceramic object, I try to give an element of chance and fantasy to my work. I will be happy to welcome you at my workplace, which now has a small sales area.

Everything is vibration. So are colours and all matter. Touching the paint, looking at the yellow, the red, the blue and all the colours that flow from them, enters into vibration with you, with your body. You're not looking for anything, you're welcoming the present moment. You discover on the outside what you are on the inside. What you've just created opens a new door for you, the door of creation that will help you to create in other areas of your life.
